Heart failure (HF) as a multiple organ system disease. The functional reserve of the heart decreases with aging via multiple mechanisms including insulin/insulin-like growth factor-1 signaling. The decrease in functional capacity increases the chance of developing HF in response to heart diseases such as myocardial ischemia and hypertension.

Age-related diastolic dysfunction is a major factor in the epidemic of heart failure. In patients hospitalized with heart failure, diastolic heart failure is now as common as systolic heart failure. We now have many successful treatments for HF<sub>r</sub>EF, while specific treatment options for HF<sub>p</sub>EF patients remain elusive.
