Beacons in the Landscape. admin March 13, 2014 February 2, 2016 No Comments on Beacons in the Landscape. It seems to me that yellow colored plants are starting to quietly scream for attention, and deservedly so. The color yellow is one of the easiest for humans to see and it most often connotes optimism and happiness. Yellow plants capture the ...

The gardens at Dia:Beacon were designed not by a landscape architect, but by artist Robert Irwin. After spending several hours inside Dia, I was able to see that the gardens were a direct extension of the art and the building itself. Four quadrants of hornbeams outside the museum are a living and breathing echo of the rhythm and cadences of the ...
