Aihwa Ong's work on capitalist discipline in the electronic industrial sector of the 1980s Malaysia challenges readers to think about the ways in which the construction and representation of women's sexuality has developed as a form of control centred in the discourse of the sexed female body and has impacted upon women's lives in the wider community.

"Book Review: "Spirits of Resistance and Capitalist ...

Berkeley, California March 1986 fIntroduction by Carla Freeman Aihwa Ong's Spirits of Resistance and Capitalist Discipline marked a critical shift in global anthropology and in feminist scholarship. At the time of its publication in 1986, globalization was not yet a recognized topic in anthropology. Since then, this stirring ethnography of factory women in Malaysia has become a classic in the fields of labor, gender, and capitalist transformation in the global South.
