I love padded board books- they are easier to handle and the baby can lick them without ruining the cardboard, because babies do things like that. This is a very sweet message, and even more enjoyable for those who enjoy the mountains, nature, etc. Makes a great gender neutral shower gift, and is not so commonly gifted.

Keep in mind that the "I love you more" argument isn't actually an argument per se. It's more of a way of trying to one-up your partner by saying that you love him more. Technically, when you get into this argument, you both come out as winners because you both love each other so much that you're willing to make it a competition.

What to Say when He Says "I Love You More" - EverydayKnow.com
When you love someone more, you're saying that you're lavishing them with all the love your heart can muster. There's nothing wrong with that. In fact, that kind of unconditional and selfless love is commendable. On the other hand, loving someone better is a whole different story.
