Authentic (or Authoritative) Interpretation of Investment Treaties by the Treaty Parties. The interpretation of investment treaties is governed by the rules on interpretation codified in Articles 31 to 33 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (VCLT). The hybrid nature of Investor-State arbitration, in which the parties to the dispute and the parties to the treaty do not coincide, calls for a “particular duty of caution” in applying these rules (Berman, Diss. opinion in Lucchetti v.

Introduction. International law on foreign investment finds its origins in the international law on the treatment of aliens and has long been regarded as an instrument of Western dominance over and exploitation of developing countries. In the aftermath of decolonization, both substantive and procedural rules on the treatment of foreign investment were at the center of developing countries’ struggle to gain control over their natural resources and establish a New International Economic Order.
